DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

One of the few Greek Revival Governor's Mansions still in use as the residence of the Chief of State, this building is a charming example of the Texas style. It is set on a hill southwest of the Capitol, on a standard city block. The building is a two story symmetrical white brick residence with a flat roof and five bay inset two story front gallery. The fluted wooden columns and the entablature with its dentils and wide cornice are proper Ionic. The absence of pediment is a regional characteristic.

The full width second story gallery has the graceful and delicate wood balustrade used by the Austin Master Builder, Abner Cook, made up of slender bundled slats forming an open diamond pattern (crows foot balusters). The first floor balustrade and stair railings are a harmonizing modern addition.

A second typical detail of Abner Cook's Greek revival buildings is seen in the sidelights and transom of the front door with an unusually tall transom intersected by the pilasters of the door jambs and carrying a high entablature. In this case the motif is not repeated in the center of the second story and instead there are five six over six sash windows with shutters. The first story gallery windows are floor length and have six over nine sashes. Additions have been made to the original block of the house at the rear and there is also an ell. There is a separate Victorian carriage house, plain but with a modified Mansard roof. Walls, terracing, and gardens were added during the residence of John Connally. The brick on the north side of the house is stuccoed and painted, the rest is exposed and painted.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

A visit to the Governor's Mansion in Austin, Texas, is an opportunity to see the best in Texas architecture and to learn a lesson in Texas history. Indeed, the heritage created by all the First Families who have lived in the Governor's Mansion has helped to shape the destiny of Austin and the State of Texas.

Texas law demands that each governor must live in a governor's mansion during his term of office. The first structure built to serve this purpose was a two-story frame "president's house" at Seventh and San Jacinto. By 1850, however, the house was clearly insufficient, and the Legislature made plans to build a new Governor's Mansion. The Legislature appropriated $2,500 for furnishings. Abner Cook, famous for his work on other Austin homes, was architect-contractor.

Cook finished the mansion by 1856. It was in Greek revival style and used bricks made in Austin, and pine logs from Bastrop. The mansion was rectangular-- 105 feet long and fifty-six feet wide-- and six Ionic pillars extended the two-story height. Cook's plans involved four rooms around a central hallway and a kitchen wing which he built apart from the main portion of the house. Nine large fireplaces gave heat during the winter; wide porches caught breezes during the long Texas summers.

Most of the first-floor rooms are used for entertaining. Two north rooms, for example, have been combined to form the Blue Room. A second reception area is the Green Room, south of the entrance hall. The chandelier in this second room is said to be the only original light fixture remaining in the Mansion.

The State Dining Room, used for all state luncheons and banquets, is back of the Green Room. It is decorated in red, and accented in white. Its furniture includes Chippendale dining chairs and a Chippendale sideboard. The south and west wings are additions to the original plan, and they serve as private rooms for the governor's family. reminders of previous occupants are scattered throughout the Portraits of outstanding Texans such as John Reagan, and William and John Wharton line the walls of the second-floor hallway; the Sam Houston room includes Houston's four-poster bed, Stephen F. Austin's mahogany chest, and Houston's hand-written treaty with the Cherokee Indians.

Recently-added furnishings have been carefully planned. Originally, Governor Pease sent Colonel S.M. Swenson to New York to buy rugs, draperies, and furniture. Subsequent additions were frequently comical: on the first floor, for example, delicate eighteenth-century French chairs stood beside massive Victorian chests. A Mansion Board quickly remedied such anomalies, however, and now each governor's wife must confer with the Board concerning her selections of furniture and decorations.

The Governor's Mansion was the first structure to be designated a Texas Historic Landmark, recorded in 1962. Official dedication ceremonies were held December 7, 1969.
