Covert Park at Mount Bonnell, Austin, Travis County, Texas

Description

Mount Bonnell is a rustic 785-foot-high promontory along the eastern shore of Lake Austin, a water reservoir formed along a segment of the Colorado River behind Tom Miller Dam. Covert Park at Mount Bonnell is a 5.1 acre linear city park that features a prominent overlook which is one of the most visited sites in Austin. The apex of the overlook is a craggy limestone outcropping surrounded by a forested area of live oak, ash juniper, persimmon and mountain laurel that spans the slope between Mount Bonnell Road and the trails at the top of the park. The character of the overall site is naturalistic, with rustic stone structures, including a staircase, an arbor and plaza, and three picnic tables. The park retains a good degree of integrity.

Covert Park at Mount Bonnell is approximately 3.5 miles northwest of the Texas Capitol in central Austin. The main entrance to the park is off Mount Bonnell Road, which forms the eastern boundary of the park. From a parking area along Mount Bonnell Road, one enters the park on foot via a long staircase with approximately 100 limestone steps (Photo 1) ascending to the plaza and overlook. A low-stepped retaining wall runs along the south edge of the steps and a simple metal railing, centered in the middle up the steps, runs all the way to the top, approximately 200 feet from the base (Photo 2). The flagstone stairs are historic, but the retaining wall was added in the early 1980s. The historic staircase was repaired and repointed in 1993. Just north of the base of the steps is a Texas Historical Commission subject marker (1969) titled "Mount Bonnell," which relates the history of the site (Photo 3). Another cast aluminum marker to the right of the stairs titled "Covert Park" is of unclear provenance or date and explains the donation of land by Frank Covert, Sr. to Travis County in the 1930s (Photo 4). Nearby, red granite monument erected in 2014 commemorates the 75th anniversary of the Covert family's donation of park land in the late 1930s (Photo 5).

At the summit of the step is a clearing. The overlook is paved in limestone flagstone and a low seating wall marks the western edge of the overlook (Photo 6). A shade arbor is located above the seat wall and is constructed of double columns with limestone block veneer that are topped with wooden beams (Photo 7). The hardscaping and the arbor were designed in 1983 and constructed shortly thereafter. At the center of the flagstone terrace is a grassy circle in which sits the historic Covert Monument, a rustic, hand-carved limestone tablet from 1938 that commemorates the dedication and donation of Mount Bonnell as a Travis County public park by Frank Covert, Sr. (Photo 8). Approximately 15 feet north of the top of the steps is an informational kiosk that was constructed in 2012 (Photo 9). The two-sided kiosk has a limestone veneer base with a Lueder stone cap stone, two steel columns that hold an informational panel and a simple roof of sheet metal.

From the overlook, one may view downtown Austin to the left (southeast), and the edge of the Texas Hill Country to the west. Although the river has been impounded and the private property in the immediate vicinity has been developed with residences, the landscape is largely green. The vantage point often seen in historic photos just below the promontory (Figures 3, 7, 8 and 11) is not safe for visitors and is therefore restricted.

A variety of rustic stone structures similar in style to those built through New Deal programs are found throughout the park. From the overlook, twin trails descend to the south approximately 100 feet. At the terminus of each trail is an historic square stone picnic table with fixed stone benches (Photo 10). Another trail descends to the north from the overlook. Approximately 275 feet down are five stone veneer trail pylons (Photo 11) and a historic rubble stone wall (Photo 12). At the base of the trail, approximately 875 feet from the summit, is another square stone picnic unit (Photo 13). The trail switches back to the south and ends 100 feet from the picnic unit on Mount Bonnell Road, approximately 800 feet north of the main entrance.

Covert Park at Mount Bonnell, Austin, Travis County, Texas

Statement of Significance

Mount Bonnell, a 785-foot-high promontory along the eastern shore of Lake Austin in is among the most prominent natural and historical landmarks in Austin, Texas. Covert Park Mount Bonnell is a 5.19 acre linear city park with a prominent overlook that has served as a popular attraction since the 1830s. The park is nominated to the National Register at the local level of significance under Criterion A in the area of Entertainment/Recreation for its use as a park and conservation area. The high rock outcropping retains a high level of historic integrity and continues to serve as a scenic overlook, a public park, and a top sightseeing destination in the city. Each year, thousands of visitors from all over the world ascend the steps of Mount Bonnell to take in sweeping panoramic views of Lake Austin and the western hills of Austin.

Mount Bonnell in the Nineteenth Century

Before Anglo settlement in Central Texas in the 1830s, the 785-foot-high promontory of Mount Bonnell was traversed by Native American tribes who lived in the area and may have recognized its utility as a defensive site due to its great height and stretching views. The first documented reference to the rugged high outcropping appears in the writings of George W. Bonnell, journalist and soldier, who documented his observations while traveling through Texas in 1838.¹

The 1969 Official Texas Historical Marker at the base of the overlook references Mount Bonnell's early connection to the well-known Texas frontiersman and Texas Ranger, William A.A. "Bigfoot" Wallace, who came to Texas in 1837 shortly after the Texas Revolution. At that time, central Texas had a large presence of Native American tribes and tensions and conflict between the native residents and Anglo-American settlers were very high. Wallace, who arrived in Austin in 1839, was lauded locally for killing a Native American at Mount Bonnell and in 1839 he recuperated in a cave at Mt. Bonnell in after contracting "flux," which was most likely cholera.² Years after Bigfoot Wallace's refuge in the cave on Mount Bonnell, when asked why he had chosen the cave as a refuge, he responded "the cave was right on the old Indian trail leading down to Austin, and I thought I would be able to keep my hand in by 'upping' one now and then; and besides, the cave was in the best hunting ground for bear in all this country..³

Julia Lee Sinks, author and historian, settled in Austin in the early days of the Republic of Texas era, arriving in the spring of 1840. She lived on West Pecan Street, now called 6th Street and wrote:

Our home was on the beaten track of the Indians into town from the pass of Mount Bonnell. The knolls beyond the quarry branch were interspersed with timber, and sometimes though not often, we would see galloping past the open spaces beyond the blanketed Indian. The path along the quarry branch, secluded as it was, became their main inlet to the town. It was a sheltered road, never traveled at night by whites, so the Indians claimed right of way, and all full moons brought moccasin tracks in abundance.⁴

The land surrounding the Mount Bonnell park site was first patented to Albert Sillsbe on May 24, 1839. In the mid-nineteenth century, a group of 130 Mormons led by pioneer Lyman Wight, settled in Austin in 1846 on the east side of the Colorado River near Mount Bonnell. Later that fall, community members constructed a gristmill, one of the first mills in Austin on the Colorado River, at the base of Mount Bonnell, but the mill was destroyed in a flood in 1848.⁵

Mount Bonnell's popularity as a sightseeing location began to rise in the mid-nineteenth century. In History of Texas: From Its History and Settlement (1874), J.M. Morphis wrote that the Texans who chose Austin as the capital of the new republic "threw out the banner of the Lone Star beyond the outer wall of civilization among the hills overlooked by Mount Bonnel [sic], in full view of Barton's lovely springs and the beautiful river and fertile valley of the Colorado and that banner they have followed and defended."⁶ Morphis also describes a visit to Mount Bonnell by General Sam Houston, the first president of the Republic of Texas:

Several years ago, General Sam Houston and Judge Williamson familiarly known in Texas as "Three-legged Willie," together ascended Mount Bonnell, which overlooks Austin and all the surrounding country for miles...General Houston, filled with admiration at the transcendent loveliness and inspiring grandeur of the scenery, slapped his companion on the shoulder and exclaimed: "Pon my soul, Williamson, this must be the very identical spot where the devil took our Savior to show and tempt Him with the riches and beauties of the world!" "Yes, general," responded Judge Williamson; "and if Jesus Christ had been fallible, He would have accepted his satanic majesty's proposition!"⁷

Morphis further provides a description of Austin and Mount Bonnell that was submitted to Turf, Field and Farm, a leading newspaper published from 1865-1903 that was based in New York City:

[Y]ou gradually ascend from the valley, until, at the end of two or three miles, you attain a considerable elevation, probably eight hundred feet or more above the level of the gulf, and reach the summit of a bold prairie ridge extending with occasional broken spurs three or four miles to your right and left. From this point, looking toward the north, the spires and domes of the lovely capital of Texas, twelve miles distant, shimmer in the sunlight; immediately beyond them Mount Bonnell, with its summit wreathed in a light mist, looks down upon the city, while at the mountain's base the crystal waters of the Colorado leap over the Mormon Falls and hurry on to Matagorda Bay.⁸

In October 1865, Major General George Armstrong Custer established the headquarters of the 2nd Division of the Calvary in Austin. During his five-months in Austin, Custer and his wife, Libbie, along with other officers and their families, frequently had picnics atop Mount Bonnell. In her memoir, Libbie Custer, who mistakenly references Mount Bonnell as Mount Brunnel, writes:

In our daily rides we found the country about Austin delightful. The roads were smooth and the surface rolling. Indeed, there was one high hill, called Mount Brunnel, where we had picnics and enjoyed the fine view, far and near, taking one of the bands of the regular regiments from the North that joined us soon after our arrival. Mount Brunnel was so steep we had to dismount and climb a part of the distance. The band played the "Anvil Chorus," and the sound descended through the valley grandly. The river, filled with sand-bars and ugly on close examination, looked like a silver ribbon. At that height, the ripened cotton, at certain seasons of the year, looked like fields of foam. The thermometer was over eighty before we left the lowlands; but at the altitude to which we climbed the air was cool.⁹

Mount Bonnell is also cited as an early location for May Pole celebrations in the 1850s and 1860s. Like many other recreational sites in Austin, such as Deep Eddy and the former Lake McDonald, Mt. Bonnell was sometimes the site of entertainment and performances. The 1969 Official Texas Historical Marker references a stunt in 1898, when Miss Hazel Keyes, trailed by her monkey "Miss Jennie Yan Yan," slid down a cable stretched from the top of Mount Bonnell to south bank of then Lake McDonald below.¹⁰ The landmark has been the subject of many legends over the decades, and local lore also named the summit "Antonette's Leap" in memory of a woman who allegedly jumped to her death to escape Indians who had just killed her fiancé.¹¹ The earliest mention of the legend can be found in Morphis' History of Texas: From Its History and Settlement; it is also recounted in J. Frank Dobie's The Legends of Texas: Pirates' Gold and Other Tales.

Twentieth-Century Developments

Covert Park has been an official public park since 1939 when the estate of Frank M. Covert, Sr. donated a major portion current park area to Travis County. In the late 1930s a hand-carved rustic limestone boulder was installed as a monument honoring Covert's gift to the county. The monument, though damaged, is among the oldest manmade features on the site. Improvements made under the stewardship of the Travis County park system included the limestone steps, retaining walls, picnic tables and trails. An additional conveyance of land from the Barrow family to Travis County was made in 1957, expanding the park. Newspaper accounts make reference to Sunday sunrise services held at the site in the 1930s and 1940s and currently, the Easter Sunrise Service draws hundreds of people each year. An article in the February 1967 edition of the University of Texas Alcade magazine noted the popularity of Mount Bonnell with students:

Generation upon generation of University men have taken their girls up those stone steps. An article in the Daily Texan (The University of Texas daily newspaper), which appeared in 1963, said, 'Because of the over-crowded conditions at Mount Bonnell, they have been forced to move to different locations to carry on in the grand manner of the University.' The mountain is of such significance to UT students through the years that it is constantly the subjects of skits in campus shows and jokes in publications."¹²

Travis County conveyed the entire park to the City of Austin in 1972. In 1983, the city made its first major improvements to the site. These improvements consisted primarily of a stone arbor, new retaining walls, and paving around the historic monument, and enhance the visitor experience without detracting from the characteristics that have made the site a popular attraction for over 175 years. A perimeter fence was constructed in 1995. In 2006, Mount

Bonnell became part of the Balcones Canyonlands Preserve, which was established to preserve the habitat of federally-listed endangered species and threatened species, including the Bracted Twistflower (Streptanthus bracteatus).

Summary

Covert Park at Mount Bonnell has long-served as one of the city's most popular destinations for residents and visitors and retains a high level of physical integrity, having maintained its rustic feel. All physical improvements have been designed to accommodate visitors without compromising the primitive feel of the site. Lacking lights and utilities, the site is rugged and difficult to access, which has helped preserve the rustic feel. The site is not programmed and interpretation takes the form of historic markers and interpretive kiosks. The site remains a popular location for photographers, weddings, and memorials. For its well-documented significance as a recreational site, gathering place, and tourist attraction without peer in the City of Austin, Covert Park at Mount Bonnell is nominated to the National Register under Criterion A in the area of Entertainment/Recreation at the local level of significance.

Historic Covert Monument

The historic Covert Monument commemorates the donation of land from Frank Covert to Travis County in 1938. The monument material is a rustic local limestone and the monument is approximately three feet in width, three feet in height and two feet deep. Of note is the name "Stasswender," which is carved below and to the right of the primary text. Stasswender is a local monument company. The pieces that have become separated from the main monument are in storage in Parks and Recreation Department maintenance facility and will be restored through the grant-funded work. The monument sits on a historic star shaped concrete base with a flagstone overlay.
