Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Warren A. and Myrta Hunt Bacon House is a two-story brick residence, designed by architect W. M. Rice of Amarillo, and built in 1916. Though primarily Colonial Revival in style, the home combines elements of a variety of different styles in a manner characteristic of large early twentieth-century homes. The large hip-roofed home, with mission tile roofing and large inviting porches, is built to take advantage of the sun and the cool southwest breezes. The house is located in the Overton Addition, the first residential addition to the Original Town of Lubbock. At the time the house was built, the Overton Addition was on the edge of Lubbock. Therefore, the most prominent facades of the home were faced south toward Broadway and east toward downtown Lubbock. The house is virtually unchanged from its original appearance. All major structural elements are intact, and the present owners intend to repair, rather than replace, those which need work.

The Warren A. and Myrta Hunt Bacon House is a two-story hip-roofed structure with an unfinished attic and a small basement. The exterior walls are of two shades of brown brick. The majority of the wall surfaces are of Elgin Butler #238 light brown brick, while the mudsill and lintels are of #650 dark brown brick.

The home has a "life-time" roof consisting of green glazed clay mission tiles applied over single-ply ruberoid roofing. On the south and east slopes of the roof are hipped dormers with the same tile roofing. Under the broad eaves are closely spaced modillion brackets and a wide wooden fascia. The house has two interior brick chimneys with dressed stone caps and ornamentation.

The most distinctive features of the home are the colossal porticos on the south and east facades. The main entrance of the home faces south toward Broadway in accordance with deed restrictions. At the time the Bacon house was built, the Overton Addition was considered to be "out in the country" west of downtown. Therefore, the most prominent facades face south toward Broadway and east toward downtown Lubbock. The house is most impressive when viewed from the southeast, as its massive Tuscan columned porches are situated in relation to the corner lot on which the house sits. The west and north facades are relatively bare.

The two flat-roofed porticos are topped with wooden railings consisting of slat balusters and a decorative St. George's cross pattern. Each is supported by four plastered columns. The columns are regularly spaced on the south facade and paired on the east facade. Each portico features the giant Tuscan order, with plain wooden entablature, unadorned capitals, unfluted columns and unadorned bases. Capitals and bases are of cut stone, while the columns themselves are plastered. The columns sit on brick pedestals which are connected by a balustrade with square brick balusters and stone upper and lower rails. The upper rail continues on around the house in the form of a projecting, flat surfaced string course about five feet above ground level. The wooden second floor balcony on the east facade has a wooden balustrade that repeats the Roman railing motif found above the cornice. The porch floors are about three feet above grade, and are level with the interior first floor. Concrete steps lead up to each porch.

The first floor window openings and the south or main entrance are topped with darker brick flat arches, most with cut stone keystones. Most windows have stone sills. Except on the front facade, fenestration is irregular, with the placement of windows related to their function and position in each room. The wooden windows are of a variety of configurations, including large 8/1 and large and small 6/1 windows on the first floor and large 4/1 and 3/1 windows on the second floor. On the second story over the main entrance is a large three part window consisting of a central set of two 6 light casement windows flanked by two small 9 light fixed windows. Three colored translucent lozenge-paned windows on the west facade illuminate the stair landing. A stained-glass window that was on the north wall of the dining room has been destroyed, and the current owners plan to replace this with one in a religious theme to complement the use of the former dining room as a chapel.

All exterior doors are wooden with glass panels. The main entrance consists of a wide door with a beveled glass panel, sidelights which each contain four small lights and wooden panels, and a thirty-two light transom. On the east, a glass-paneled door with an eight light transom leads from the porch into the main parlor area. At the rear, another door at the top of three concrete steps leads to the kitchen, while an on-grade door opens on stairs leading down into the basement and up into the first floor level. A multi-light French door opens onto the second story porch.

The interior is arranged so that every major living area has at least two exposures. The downstairs consists of a living/dining room on the east, a kitchen on the northwest and an office/study on the southwest. There are four large bedrooms upstairs. All original molding, doors and facings, and cabinets are being retained in the house, as well as the original staircase. No major structural changes are planned in the current remodeling.

A clapboard double garage with an asphalt shingled hipped roof is also on the property. Each portion of the garage has two braced doors with multi-light windows. Above the doors is a hipped dormer with one narrow multi-light window.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Warren A. and Myrta Hunt Bacon house, built in 1916, is both an architectural and historical landmark in Lubbock. It is prominently located in an area of historic homes on Broadway, which was the principal residential street in the city in the early twentieth century. The large Colonial Revival home, designed by architect W. M. Rice of Amarillo, is one of the few examples of this style in Lubbock. Original owner Warren A. Bacon, a successful businessman, real estate promoter and civic leader, was among the earliest settlers of Lubbock County. His wife, Myrta Hunt Bacon, was the daughter of George M. Hunt, early South Plains colonist. The Hunt family settled in Estacado, the first Anglo settlement on the South Plains, in 1884. In 1890, the family moved to the new town of Lubbock. The Hunt family was active in the development of Lubbock, and numerous descendents of George M. Hunt live in the city today.

Warren A. Bacon came to the South Plains of Texas from Missouri in 1893. Though not formally educated, he became quite successful. He began as a shepherd in eastern Lubbock County, but soon expanded his operations to include his own sheep. He filed on school land in Lubbock County in 1898. He continued acquiring land, especially ranches, much of which became prime residential and commercial property in the expanding city. Bacon drilled one of the earliest successful irrigation wells in Lubbock County. He irrigated an 80-acre truck farm from this well, illustrating the commercial possibilities of irrigation. Bacon continued his real estate and investment interests throughout his life, and was also president of the Butler-Bacon Lumber Company and vice-president of Stephens-McKee-Bacon Company, a wholesale grocery. He helped organize the Citizen's National Bank of Lubbock and served on its Board of Directors. He was active in civic affairs, serving as a member of the first Board of City Development in 1926 and of the first City Planning Commission in 1931. He was chairman of the collections committee during the effort to bring the Fort Worth and Denver Railway to Lubbock in 1928. During the Depression, he was a member of the Lubbock Loyalty Council. This was a group of interested citizens who banded together to create a calm business atmosphere and bolster public confidence in the city's institutions, particularly its three banks. Partly due to the Loyalty Council efforts, there were no bank failures in Lubbock during the Depression. Warren Bacon, age 66, died of a heart attack in 1938.

Bacon married Myrta E. Hunt in 1900. She was the daughter of George M. Hunt, who settled in the Quaker colony of Estacado in 1884. Estacado, in Lubbock County, was the first Anglo settlement on the South Plains. In September 1890, the Hunt family moved to Old Lubbock, where Hunt managed the first hotel, the Nicolette. In 1891, both the town and the hotel were moved to a new site, the present location of the city of Lubbock. The Hunt family was quite active in the development of the new city. Each of the Hunt daughters married a Lubbock pioneer. In addition to Mrs. Bacon, the daughters included Mrs. Frank Wheelock, wife of the Lubbock townsite promoter who was the City's first mayor, and Mrs. George Wolffarth, wife of a Lubbock County rancher who founded the Citizen's National Bank. Numerous descendents of the Hunt family live in Lubbock today.

In 1909, Warren Bacon purchased five lots in the Overton Addition from his brother-in-law Frank E. Wheelock. Platted in 1908, the Overton Addition was the first residential addition to the Original Town of Lubbock. It was platted by pioneer physician M. C. Overton, who eventually built his own home next door to the Bacons'.

In 1916, the Bacon home was built facing Broadway, the principal residential street in the Overton Addition. It was constructed from the plans of W. M. Rice, an Amarillo architect who probably acted as contractor as well. Rice also designed the 1916 Lynn County Courthouse and was contractor for the nearly identical 1921 Freestone County Courthouse. Both of these courthouses contain architectural elements, such as the massive columns, that are similar to those used in the Bacon residence.

The large comfortable home that Rice designed is in the Colonial Revival style and is quite unusual for Lubbock. The home was owned by the Bacon family for over 65 years. After Mr. Bacon's death in 1938, Mrs. Bacon continued to live in the house. She died in 1967, at the age of 89. Before her death, she was thought to be the oldest surviving person in Lubbock County who had been present when the County was organized in 1891.

From her death until 1981 the Bacon family leased the house to the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity. During this period, Broadway continued to change from strictly residential to mixed residential-commercial uses. The change was dictated by the value of commercial property near the downtown area and the movement of residential populations to outlying areas of the City. Many of the fine old homes along Broadway were torn down to make room for new commercial structures, while others were converted to retail, restaurant and office spaces. In December 1981, the Episcopal Diocese of Northwest Texas acquired the property from the Bacon family for use as Diocesan headquarters and offices.
