Description:

The Alice Ghormley Curtis House is a 2-story, frame, classically influenced dwelling with a center passage plan and a low pitched, bellcast, hipped roof. The foundation is red brick, the exterior walls are yellow brick, and the roof is covered with wood shingles. On a large lot with several large elm trees, the Curtis House fronts east on Washington Street in a residential area of Amarillo, about 10 blocks south of the central business district. In the place of a front lawn is a large concrete parking lot. At the northwest corner of the lot is a frame garage that is Contributing. The buildings are in excellent condition and retain their integrity to a high degree.

Potter County is in the Texas Panhandle, on the south portion of the High Plains. The county's terrain is level prairie land, broken by the Canadian River and its tributaries. Amarillo (1990 population 168,693) serves as county seat and the region's economic hub based on agriculture and the petrochemical industry. The south part of the town (beginning at South 29th Street) is in Randall County. The community follows a grid plan that has little variation (see USGS map). The Curtis House was built prior to the platting of the Bivins Addition, in which it now stands.

The main (east) facade has a full width, 1-story porch with a solid red brick balustrade that wraps around to the north elevation (see Photograph 1). Large, white columns are spaced equidistantly and support the porch's flat roof with its denticulated cornice and modillioned eaves; columns framing the off-center entry steps are grouped in threes. The front door is flanked by sidelights and Tuscan pilasters. Two 1/1 wood windows are on either side of the door; all windows on the house have cast concrete sills and lintels. A large, pedimented, gable dormer with wood siding has a tripartite window, with ornate tracery in the upper sashes. Tuscan pilasters are on either side of this window. The pediment features an elaborate cartouche with garlands and modillioned eaves. A small widow's walk with wrought iron cresting crowns the building's hipped roof. Two chimneys are most visible from this facade.

The porch wraps around to the east side of the north facade (see Photograph 2). A concrete ramp with an iron rail provides handicap access to the porch and building. Centered on this facade is a tripartite window with transom; the transom has ornate tracery detailing. Above this window is a gable dormer with wood siding, boxed cornice returns, and modillioned eaves. A pair of 1/1 wood windows is centered on the dormer.

A frame addition with a hipped roof dominates the back (west) facade (see Photograph 3). The addition may have originally been added as a porch. It existed as early as 1921, the first time the house appears on Sanborn Fire Insurance Company maps. Wood windows are 1/1. Centered on this facade is a wood sided, pedimented, gable dormer with a single 1/1 wood window.

The south facade of the house has 3-bays. Protruding slightly, the central bay features a pair of 1/1 wood windows. Above is a dormer that echoes the dormer on the north facade.

The symmetrical interior of the Curtis house follows a center passage plan. The 1st floor has rooms flanking a central hall (see Continuation Sheet 7-3); living areas were on this floor while bedrooms were on the 2nd (see

United States Department of the Interior
National Park Service

Continuation 7-4); currently both floors provide office space. The interior exhibits refined wood detailing that includes deep cornice moldings with an egg and dart motif, elaborate door and window surrounds, and intricately carved fireplace mantels (see Photograph 5). The 1st floor entry hall is dramatically separated from the back hall stair by massive Tuscan columns and squared pilasters (see Photograph 6).

At the rear of the house is a Contributing 1-story frame garage. The L-plan building has a wood shingle intersecting gable roof and holds two cars (see Photograph 7). Two outbuildings, a windmill and a cistern, are no longer extant.

The Curtis House has not undergone major alterations; the property retains its integrity of setting, location, design, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

Statement of Significance:

The 1906 Alice Ghormley Curtis House is a product of the historical revival styles that dominated residential design from the turn of the century through the 1940s. Eligible at the local level of significance, the house meets Criterion C in the area of Architecture, as an excellent example of exuberant Classical Revival detailing.

Until its 1887 incorporation the Amarillo area remained a remote region of Texas. The community experienced boomtown growth in the last decade of the 19th century. This surge is due to the 1887 construction of the Fort Worth and Denver City Railroad through Potter County. Amarillo savored remarkable growth propelled by its position as a railhead for cattle ranches in the Texas Panhandle (by 1900 the Southern Kansas, the Pecos and Northern Texas, and the Chicago, Rock Island and Gulf railroads had forged through town), and its vital role in the cotton industry. The population almost tripled between 1890 and 1900. This large influx of residents heralded a construction boom that resulted in unprecedented building.

Alice Ghormley Curtis built the house at 1626 South Washington Street in 1906. She was born in 1852 in Tennessee and moved to Jack County, Texas, with her family around the time of the Civil War. In 1868 she married W.R. (Bill) Curtis, a Texas Ranger and prominent Panhandle rancher. The couple moved to Henrietta, Texas, in 1881. He had extensive ranching interests in Texas and further west as well. After her husband's 1901 death, Curtis moved to Amarillo and built this house, which she lived in until her 1923 death.

Local contractor J.D. Singleton (1861-1928) built the house. A native of Alabama, he came to Amarillo in 1902 by way of McClennan County, Texas. He first entered the local planing mill business, and served as a general contractor by 1905. Singleton served as contractor on many buildings in the Panhandle.

Popular interest in the 1893 World's Fair, widely available pattern books of the era, and the increasing accessibility of pre-fabricated parts influenced classically designed residences at the turn of the century. The 1893 World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago aroused an interest in reviving classical styles that became prevalent throughout the country during the first half of the 20th century, while pattern books and pre-fabricated parts exposed and proliferated this interest to a larger audience. A Classical Revival residence is generally defined with a 1-story porch that is supported by classical columns.

While the asymmetrical wraparound front porch, and pyramidal roof are more common to earlier Victorian era architecture, Classical Revival details define the Curtis House. On the exterior, ornate classical columns with Tuscan capitals support a 1-story porch that dominates the facade. Other typical characteristics include tripartite fenestration configurations, pedimented dormers with decorative garlands, and dramatic dentils and modillions. Interior Classical details include decorative swags that adorn the bay windows and transoms, deep molding on door and window surrounds, and large columns with Tuscan and Ionic capitals.
