DESCRIPTION:

The North Bishop Avenue Commercial Historic District is in the central part of the Oak Cliff community of Dallas, seven blocks west of the original Oak Cliff plat. The historic district comprises approximately 12 acres, adjacent to and just south of the Miller and Stemmons Historic District. The district is made up of a small, contiguous group of 1920s and 1930s commercial buildings flanking a 2-1/2 block stretch of North Bishop Avenue between Davis Street and the alley between 8th and Melba streets. The North Bishop Avenue Commercial Historic District consists primarily of 1- and 2-story brick commercial buildings, except for two small frame dwellings at the southeast corner. The character of the district is established by early 20th century vernacular one- and two-part commercial buildings that feature geometric brick corbelling and decorative parapets. The district includes 15 Contributing properties and five Noncontributing properties. Most of the Contributing properties were built during the mid-1920s, although the period of significance extends from 1915 (the earliest building) to 1944, fifty years ago. The district retains a high degree of architectural integrity with few intrusions.

The historic district is roughly I-shaped with most of the buildings facing North Bishop Avenue. The area is flat and devoid of vegetation, except for the trees and grass lawn found around the two houses in the southeast corner of the district. The historic district abuts the Miller-Stemmons Historic District to the north. It is five blocks north of Jefferson Boulevard and two blocks west of Zangs Boulevard -- both major Oak Cliff thoroughfares. Streets in the district run in the cardinal directions.(see site map)

Buildings in the district are 1- and 2-story brick of load bearing construction resting on concrete foundations. By design, they are also one- or two-part commercial block forms creating a continuous row of vernacular storefronts. Concrete sidewalks cover the approximately ten foot width between the building facades and the curbs. A variety of brick types, including buff and red textured brick and smooth-faced red brick, are used on the buildings. Cast stone is also present on parapet coping and other decoration.

Although most of the buildings have little architectural style, an exception is the 1-story Tudor Revival style building at 313-21 North Bishop Avenue (1925, Site No. L6-6557: Photo 1) with architectural details such as a steeply pitched faux roof with multiple parapeted front gables.

Most of the storefronts are intact, though several have been sympathetically rehabilitated. Many of the buildings are subdivided into several storefronts by wood and glass display fronts.

The two houses (1920, Site No. L6-1349, 336 W. 8th; and 1915, Site No. L6-6621, 314 N. Bishop) anchoring the southeast corner of the district are bungalows with front gable roofs and Classical Revival details. The storefront of 410 North Bishop (1925, Site No. L6-6623) has been sympathetically rehabilitated and is Contributing. The few Noncontributing buildings in the district are contemporaneous examples that underwent substantial alterations. Although a small number of Noncontributing properties exist, the district is cohesive and retains a high degree of integrity.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE:

The North Bishop Avenue Commercial Historic District lies within the Hillside Addition, one of a series of subdivisions developed by the Dallas Land & Loan Company, headed by Oak Cliff founder T.L. Marsalis. The historic district is significant at a local level for its excellent collection of 1920s and 1930s commercial architecture. It relates to the historic context Suburban Development in Oak Cliff, Dallas, Texas, 1887-1944. The district is representative of commercial districts that arose within formerly residential areas in Oak Cliff, under development pressure created by busy streetcar stops and intersections. The period of significance extends from the construction in 1915 of the oldest extant building in the district to 1944, fifty years ago. The district is eligible for inclusion in the National Register under Criterion C at the local level in the area of Architecture.

The Hillside Addition was platted and lots offered for sale in November 1890, just three years after Marsalis began the development of Oak Cliff. Adjoining the western border of the original plat of Oak Cliff, the Addition included Bishop Avenue as a main north to south thoroughfare and followed a formal gridiron street pattern with rectangular blocks and lots. The Addition was much larger than it is today, extending several blocks north of Davis Street. Some of this property was later partitioned and included within the Miller and Stemmons Addition. (see the Miller and Stemmons Historic District)

Initially, the Hillside Addition grew slowly and was almost exclusively residential in character (Sanborn: 1922; City Directories). Completion in 1904 of the Oak Cliff and Dallas streetcar line through the center of the Addition along Bishop Avenue spurred development by providing easy access to Dallas jobs for prospective residents. By 1922, the district was densely developed by new residents building mostly detached, single-family dwellings.

The streetcar line made a 90-degree turn at the intersection of Davis Street and North Bishop Avenue, to head south. The establishment of a streetcar stop at this busy intersection provided the impetus to a small group of merchants to build stores and other businesses there. Most of these commercial buildings faced onto the 500 block and part of the 400 block of North Bishop Avenue. The remainder of North Bishop Avenue was lined with frame houses facing north or south onto intersecting streets.

In time, the small commercial node at the intersection of Davis Street and North Bishop Avenue grew south along North Bishop, encroaching upon the adjacent residential neighborhood. Most of the extant buildings in the historic district were built and occupied by the 1930s.

Predominately vernacular in detailing, these buildings included the 1- and 2-story brick buildings found in the 400 block of Bishop Avenue. Large shop windows, transoms and double doors were repeated in each of the Contributing properties on this block (Photo 2).

Particular style influences can be discerned on the Tudor Revival 1-story building at 400-408 North Bishop (1925, Site No. L6-6622; Photo 3), which is similar to the smaller building at 313-21 North Bishop (1925, Site No. L6-6557) found to the southwest across the Eighth Street - North Bishop Avenue intersection. Tudor Revival details on both buildings include the arched door openings with castellated parapets and faux side gabled roofs.

The district's commercial buildings housed businesses that catered to the residents of surrounding areas, include the Miller and Stemmons Addition north of Davis Street. These buildings reflected national and locally common trends in commercial architecture from the 1910s to the early 1930s. Almost all are one-part commercial block forms with limited stylized ornamentation. In the late 1920s, the district housed several specialty stores as well as drugstores, two garages, a movie theater and a bakery.

The two remaining properties in the district (1920, 336 W. 8th, Site No. L6-1349; and 1915, 314 N. Bishop, Site No. L6-6621) are excellent examples of the domestic fabric that was erased by commercial encroachment. Both are 2-story frame bungalows. Each house has Classical Revival details such as Doric porch columns and an open gabled front. The second story (replacement) windows of the house at 336 W. 8th also retain their Classical Revival palladian grouping on the front and side facades.

Recently, the North Bishop commercial area has been the focus of substantial renovation efforts, resulting in the reversal of unsympathetic alterations. Some of the historic commercial buildings near the north end of the district require the removal of stucco coatings or modern awnings before they can be considered Contributing (Photo 4). Others may need sensitive restoration of their historic fenestration.

While the two remaining houses in the district have been converted to commercial use, they retain a high degree of architectural integrity. Despite unsympathetic changes that have rendered a few of the commercial buildings within the district Noncontributing, the North Bishop Avenue Commercial Historic District retains a high degree of architectural integrity and is an excellent collection of early 20th century commercial buildings.

JUSTIFICATION OF BOUNDARIES - NORTH BISHOP AVENUE COMMERCIAL HISTORIC DISTRICT

The North Bishop Avenue Commercial Historic District is in the Hillside Addition and includes a small but intact enclave of historic commercial buildings. The district is surrounded on all four sides by residential neighborhoods. Although buildings in the district are closely interrelated with houses in the neighborhood (the district was a low density commercial node, and stores that occupied the buildings catered almost exclusively to nearby residents), the district possesses an architectural character that differs markedly from that of the neighborhoods that surround the district.
